

27th March

To whom it may concern

Morgan McKinley assigned Simon Wallace and The Whole Thing for a teambuilding event. The generic brief was to create an innovative experience which would generate a more interactive cross selling environment within a team of dynamic sales people. Simon took the time to visit us and further question our intentions and desired outcomes. He then designed a tailored programme which incorporated a competitive team building exercise with a thought provoking analysis at the end of the session. The follow up questionnaires helped us evaluate both formal and informal training needs for our current team and to identify where we had motivational and skills issues. Feedback on the afternoon was positive and the team walked away from a very productive, collaborative and fun experience. I would recommend the programme to any corporate business looking to shake up preconceived attitudes and to drive self improvement at all levels.

X

Christo Daniels
Managing Director

